STRANGE BUT DEVOTED COMRADES.

How They Fed and Played Together_At tacked by Wolves A Fighting Pony Springs At Them and Comes Off Victor.

I am fond of animals-but I don't believe I need tell that to my fellow Eight O'Clockers as a piece of news, for I have no doubt they reached that conclusion some time ago. Well, this being the case, I always make it a point wherever I go to learn all I can about every. body's pets, and make notes of the interesting things I pick up in this way.

So recently, while on a visit to friends, I heard several such stories. One of these was about two pets that belonged to a young man named Harry. One was named Bevis and the other Dollie. The first was a handsome re-triever dog, the second a magpie. Bevis picked Dollie up in the woods one day, and, as her wing was hurt, his master carried her home and nursed her until she was well. She had evidently falles out with her brothers and sisters, and therefore another fall—out of the nest-followed. There is a good moral in that, too, if you look for it.

As soon as the young magpie's wing was well Harry set her free, but she refused to go away. She had evidently decided in her own away. She had evidently decided in her own min'l that his pets had a nice, easy time of it, and so she elected herself an active member of the party, rather than go off and earn her own living.

Dollie, as they named her, and Beyls were fast friends from the beginning. Magpies, as perhaps you know, are of a bold, confident disposition and easily tamed. When they come to know their friends, and they make no mistakes about that, they can be turned loose, and they will hop here and there turned loose, and they will hop here and there without fear, attending to everybody's business except their own.

Dollie evidently recognized the fact that she owed her life to Bevis, for she would have died if he had not picked her up. So she adopted him, and he, oddly enough, reciprocated her affection. They were as strange a pair of comrades as one could imagine. Wherever Bevis went there went Dollie also, either snuggled costly on his back or his head, or playing and hopping along at his side.

This strange couple always answered the bell at meal times, just like the rest of the

This strange couple always answered the bell at meal times, just like the rest of the family, and would have been greatly astonished if they had failed to receive a portion of the good things. Sometimes Bevis was the first to receive a tid-bit, and then he uttered a low call, and laid it down before Dollie, who gave an answering note of thanks before eating the git thus presented.

There was nothing mean about Dollie, and she gave Bevis back as good as he gave her. As soon as her turn came, she always hopped up to Bevis, and if he was lying down so that she could reach him she actually down so that she could reach him she actually put the food in the big mouth he opened to receive it, or else put it down before him and stood on one foot, with her bright black eyes stood on one foot, with her bright black eyes nxed on him, while he enjoyed her present.

It was only a bird and a dog but for all that there never was a more touching picture of unselfish affection.

But strange as this sight was it was a still more comical one to see these two odd friends at play, and it was something higher and betather and the comical to see how they adapted.

ter than comical to see how they adapted their play to each other, the dog to the bird and the bird to the dog. "It really did seem almost uncanny at times," said their master. Eevis could have crunched Dollie's life out

Hevis could have crunched Dollie's life out at one snap of his strong jaws, while Dollie could easily have put his eyes out at one stroke of her bill, but neither felt the least fear of the other. One of their favorite games was to go out in the grass together and roll over each other in gleeful play, and Dollie, never fearing, actually let Bevis take her head in his mouth, and though he pretended to be in a dreadful rage, growling and snarling, not so much as a feather of hers did he ever once pull out, nor, though Dollie in her turn scolded and flapped her wings on his back, pecking at his head and ears, did she once break the skin or bruise her beloved playmate.

how I wish you could have seem them chase each other. Bevis tearing off at full gallop, barking, and Dollie flying after him, screaming at the top of her voice, alighting on his back with a triumphant shout, and holding on delightedly as he walked sedately back to the starting point. Sometimes Dollie seized him by the tail, and let him haul her along, half hopping, half flying, until Bevis along, half hopping, half flying, until Bevia turned, and then the two rolled over in a free. friendly fight. Sometimes the dog won the victory and sometimes the bird, but it was victory and sometimes the bird, but it was all genuine fun and good nature right along. "Foor Dollie!" and Harry, "she was shot by a man who thought her a wild bird and lievis mourned for her as sincerely as if they had both been human beings. I believe it shortened his life, for from that day he moped about and would hardly eat, and in less than two months the poor fe low just lay down and died.

"They had been together, for eight years."

"They had been together for eight years, day and night, for Pollie perched in his ken-nel, and it seemed as if Pevis could not get along without her."

Attacked by Wolves.

Once Nebraska had been to visit at her neigh-or's and started for home when it was nearly bor's and started for home when it was nearly dark but as it was a moonlight night she did not feel lonely, and had just thought. "What a lovely evening for a ride." when she heard pattering steps. Looking around, she saw two woives stealthily following. She urged her pony to its greatest speed and tried to think out what she should do, for she was ty this time only half way home and account.

think out what she should do, for she was by this time only half way home and seven miles from the nearest house.

She kept perfectly still, because she knew that if she screamed before she was attacked, although it would scare the animals away for a time, they would return, and would scon get used to the noise and not be frightened by it. She felt certain so few of them would not dare attack her, for wolves are very cowardly, but she also knew that they would summon the rest of the pack almost instantly. The wolves were now in full pursuit, and she, glancing back, saw there were three.

The wolves were now in full pursuit, and she, glancing back, saw there were three. She was alarmed indeed now, and as they were gaining on her every minute, she knew something must be done if she was to reach home alive. She knew the wolves would not long hesitate to attack her, for there was quite a large pack of them gathering. Her pony, too, snifled danger, and the next instant before she could comprehend what he was going to do, he had turned and sprung right into the midst of the snarling pack, pawing and kicking right and left.

He had, not forgotten his wild, habits, nor

He had not forgotten his wild habits, nor how he had many times saved himself from the ferocious animals. And now his bravery stood his mistress in good stead, for as his feet came down on the wolves fierce yelps showed that he was not dealing gentle taps. In a few seconds there were four stretched dead on the ground, and the others had fied. The young rider had thought, as soon as she knew what he was going to do, that she was safe if she could keep on his back, and this required all her strength and skill. this required all her strength and skill.
When the pack were gone see looked down at the dead bodies and shuddered as she thought of her narrow escape. With no injuries and only a few anxious minutes she had secured four dead wolves, worth more than $50.

She dismounted and slung them over Pawnee's back and then hurried home.

No need of saying that her father and mother were surprised to see her come up to the door and exhibit triumphantly four slain

After his glorious exploit the pony was more petted than before. Did he not deserve it?—St. Nicholas.

A Dean's Joke.

A funny story is told of Dean Swift, who was a witty man and fond of a joke at the expense of other people, as most witty people are. One very cold night, when he was traveling, he stopped at a little inn. There was only one fire in the house, and the guests of the inn, crowding about it, left no place for the new-comer.

went out to see the remarkable horse eating

Oysters.

Then the cunning Dean made himself comfortable in the warmest corner and ordered his supper.

Presently back came the hostler, with the disappointed crowd after him.

"He won't touch them, sir," cried the hostler.

changes of Yesterday. Superintendent W. A. Conklin, of the Central Park Menagerie determined yesterday to transfer the hippopotami from their summer transfer the hippopotami from their summer quarters to their winter abode in the lion house, and an enclosed road was made with old disused railings, backed up by wooden cases and made strong with the help of much rope. The superintendent and Hugh Downey, the guardian of the hippopotami, were the principal actors, but every keeper was present and hundreds of the curious besides. It was about 4 P. M. when Downey began to coar Mrs. Murphy out of her pen, offering dainty loaves of bread, and the mother would have sone willingly enough but hittle Miss.

have gone willingly enough, but little Miss Fatima would again and again run back, and then, of course, the mother would go back, too. After half an hour Mrs. Murphy and Fatima were actually inside the house and the gates were closed.

The next animal to be housed was Caliph.

The next animal to be housed was Campa, the father of the family. Downey and Pat Barry were surprised at his willimmess to change his quarters, for he dashed out of his pen "full cry" and opened mouthed. Downey made an escape over the low iron fence to the right, but Barry went down the homestretch and got over the far fence in an incredibly short time. An addition to the menagerie is a hyacinthme macaw from Brazil, a present given by the Misses Agnes and Selma Sterlitz, which has been placed in the parrot house.

WHY DOES HE BESIGN?

A church meeting of the Puritan Congregational Church in Lafayette and Mercer avenues, Brooklyn, was held last night to act on the resignation of the Rev. Dr. Edward P. Ingersoll, the pastor, which he unexpectedly presented at the service last Sunday morning. Le Roy Smith presided. It was decided by a vote of 72 to 22 to take a vote on the acceptance of Dr. Ingersoll's resignation by ballot. The ballot resulted in a vote of 135 to 33 against its acceptance, and an urgent appeal was made to Dr. Ingersoll to withdraw it.

Dr. Ingersoll explained that during the week he had received a call to the Park Congregational church at St. Paul, but had not yet accepted it. He very firmly declined to withdraw his resignation or to reconsider it.

withdraw his resignation or to reconsider it.
"I have determined to go," he said. "I see no hope for successful work here." Although efforts were made to draw out a further explanation from Dr. Ingersoll, he remained silent, and even refused to respond to this appeal from Mrs. Kate Upson Clarke. "Why, what's the matter? Are we so bad that the pastor can't do anything with us?"

Vanderbilt's yacht, which was seized by men from the United States Marsial's office on Thursday on a process issued by Judge Brown. O'Neill, the inspector of customs, who had charge of the yacht when the marshal's men seized her, made a report in writing to the surveyor yesterday. He had been instructed not to give up possession of the yacht unless forced to. He had made a show of resistance, but, as there were six deputy marshals, it was only a show.

TO STOP THE ESCAPE OF IMMIGRANTS.

General O'Beirne has determined to stop the escape of detained immigrants, which has for some time past has been going on at the Barge Office. He has suspended Jahn, captain of the night watch, and three of his assistants, and other men will fill their places temporarily. General O'Beirne said yesterday that he was convinced that there was a sort of "underground railroad" in operation at the Barge Office, and that the people who escaped did so with the connivance of employes. On Thursday night a detained immigrant named Herman tried to evenpe, but was captured be-fore he got out of the Barge Office.

DISAPPEARED WITH HIS ECEROWED FINERY. Herman Feld, a waiter, of 176 Suffolk street, was arraigned at the Fesex Market Police Court vesterday to answer a charge of grand larceny preferred by Louis Levene, a tailor, of 144 Heater street. Levene alleges that on April 16th last Feld induced him to accompany him to a photograph gallery. "Levene," Feld is alleged to have said, "Two agood chance to get married. Lend me your watchchain and locket to have my picture taken." Levene complied with Feld's request, and then Feld said that one thing was lacking, and that was a walking-cane. He went out to purchase one, and Levene did not see him again ustil Thursday night, when they met in Grand street. A pawn ticket representing the property was found on Feld. Justice Duffy held the defendant in default of $1,000 bail. Herman Feld, a waiter, of 176 Suffolk street.

Connor Ward, sixty-eight years old, who was formerly a well-known politician in Orange, N. J., was found last evening in an onthouse in the rear of John Higgins' liquor onthouse in the rear of John Higgins' liquor shop, in Centre atreet, in that city with his throat cut. Ward, who was weak from less of blood, said that he had been attacked by a negro, and cut with a razor. When Ward was searched by the police, however, a razor stained with blood was found in his pocket, and the police say there is no doubt that he attempted to commit suicide and inflicted the wound in his throat himself. Ward has been leading a dissipated life for some time. He was removed to the Memorial Hospital.

Editor of The Times:

A day or two ago I received from the Board of Health a notification that a nuisance existed on a certain premises on Seventeenth isted on a certain premises on Seventeenth street and was ordered to have the same abated within five days. Having secured at once the services of a plumber, we proceeded together to the designated spot, and there found that there was ample room for the complaint, but the nuisance had been caused by depredators from the street and from the adjoining house. Willing, however, to do anything possible to promote the health of the city, we directed the plumber to unstop the closets and clean up the premises thoroughly and remove the filth. The day following we were notified that the job had stop the closets and clean up the premises thoroughly and remove the filth. The day following we were notified that the job had been completed with the exception of removing the filth from the premises (which consisted of old ashes, peach stones, decomposed garbage, dead rats, etc.). This the plumber said he did not know how to dispose of; the city carts would not haul it away, and if he hired a wagon to remove it there was nowhere that it was allowable to dump it. The city forbade its being dumped within the city limits eitizens of the county would object to its being dumped on their lands, and the important question is. What are we to do with it? It will not burn, so the crematory would not help us even if it were in operation. We cannot eat it, so what are we to do? Can you help us out of the difficulty?
